

Audrey Wang is an interdisciplinary innovator, advocate, and student studying Cognitive Science and Analytics at UC Berkeley. She believes in the power of technology to catalyze change and amplify youth voices in mental health and AI safety. Currently, she is working on understanding the effects of AI tools on the well-being of young people. Previously, she developed a platform named Affective Cookies, which inspires users to improve their mental health through inclusivity and empathy. Her passion for bridging the gap in understanding youth social media and AI use has led her to serve as a youth advisor to Lady Gaga's Born This Way Foundation, GoodforMEdia, Common Sense, and the Technology & Adolescent Wellness (TAM) Program. She has spoken at the White House, SF Tech Week, the Aspen Health Strategy Group Conference, the Behavioral Health Tech Conference, the Stanford Responsible AI Conference, the Human Connection + AI Summit, and ahead of Super Bowl LIX.
